I picked up this book because FE may be a complimentary line of business I may consider adding in the future. David Duford has really outlined THE way that you can truly be a gentleman and sell life insurance in an ethical and professional manner. If you want to be a true professional in selling Final Expense policies, this book is the blueprint you need to take you from being a person people want to avoid... to being the professional people want to see and feel comfortable doing business with. HIGHLY RECOMMENDED!

This book is a practical guide that feels like a behind-the-scenes look at what to avoid, as well has how to succeed, in final expense. It is obvious that the author has a deep understanding of the pitfalls to look out for, as unsuspecting agents may not be aware of the tricks employed by some marketing organizations and recruiters in the industry. Objection handling, lead generation and handling, even down to what to wear on appointments - this is a very thorough book and very nicely laid out. Great job!!!

This book is great for beginners and seasoned FE agents. I would have greatly benefited from this reading had I read this as a new agent. Unfortunately, I had to learn the FE biz the very hard and costly way especially with selecting the best FMO/IMO to work with and carrier's commission and contracting options. This book was well written and I would definitely recommend this book as a comprehensive guide for new and senior agents.

This is a must have for any serious FE agent. David has put together a resource that would launch the career of any new agent and respark the veteran as well. Having used Davids techniques I know his no BS style works.

Book is too basic and short for 16 dollars. It is a fluffy sales book that happens to cover final expense but not in much detail. If one wants to get this kind of sales training they can simply buy a popular sales book out there. Not that the book is bad, he makes a few good points, but the reason I bought the the book was the title mentions something about a lead generation system. The only lead generation system in the book is if all else fails, door knock. I was hoping for some example letters to send to potential clients and how to find these clients via the internet to contact. The business reply mailer is a good idea but we need to find those people to whom we send the reply mailer. It is just not a nuts and bolts type of book. It is good for those who do not know what to say calling warm and col leads plus door knocking (he is right about the door knocking, it is a good strategy); if this is what you need, then definitely buy it. It is just not for me. Also, whoever the publisher is needs to do a better job in editing the book.

I am grateful for David's guidance and candor over the past year or so and his book is a reflection of his mentoringship style. No BS, just the facts and what to reasonably expect out of this business. There is no hype or kool-aide to drink, just the truth as he has learned and experienced over the years. I went from knowing nothing about Final Expense Insurance Sales to last week writing $10,722.00 in annual premium using the laid-back approach system to selling FE detailed in this book. It is a comprehensive guide, leaving few, if any, questions unanswered.

David Duford is upfront, knowledgeable and gives you so much information about this industry. I am so happy that I read his book. He is credible and truthful. I learned more from his book than I have from other sources.

This is really a great book if you are interested in Selling Final Expense Insurance. Funny how the title is exactly what you get inside. This is a must read for anyone representing companies that offer Final Expense Insurance.
